Coaching in the Climate Crisis

A Certificate in Climate Coaching

About the Certificate

Climate conversations have never been more urgent. But how do you bring the climate crisis into your coaching?

This three-day programme is designed for qualified coaches who are concerned about the climate crisis, and who want the space to explore critical questions, including: How do I align my personal values with my professional practice? How do I enhance the authenticity of my coaching? How do I bring climate crisis awareness into my coaching, and increase my impact as a coach on individual, organisational, and societal change?

If you are already asking these questions, you are not alone. There is a growing global community of climate coaches who are refusing to look away as we face climate and ecological breakdown.

Whether you are an independent coach or coaching within your workplace, Coaching in the Climate Crisis will support you to reflect on your own climate journey and your relationship to the climate crisis, and consider how you, as a coach, can bring this into the service of your client, their system, and the planet.

What you will learn

This programme is built on the AoEC climate coaching competencies of systemic thinking, coach as disruptor, behaviour change, and insight & self-management.

Within this context we will explore how to be a climate conscious coach; how to have a coaching conversation around climate change; how you can help others have a conversation around climate change; and how and when to introduce climate change into your existing coaching. This programme will also introduce you to a selection of climate coaching models and tools, and consider how to align your own coaching practice with the climate crisis.

Each of the three modules will integrate climate coaching practice and feedback, helping you to develop your competence and confidence when bringing the climate crisis into coaching conversations.

By the end of this programme you will understand how each of the climate coaching competencies informs your own practice, and how to be a climate conscious coach.

Learning outcomes

- Understanding of how to be a climate conscious coach
- Awareness of your own position on climate coaching
- Insight into a systemic approach to climate coaching
- Familiarity with the AoEC climate coaching competencies
- Experience of practising and evaluating climate coaching
- Clarification of your own coaching ethics

Who this programme is for

Coaching in the Climate Crisis is for qualified coaches who want to contribute to more urgent progress in addressing climate change. It will support you in enhancing your own self-awareness as a coach, whilst considering how you can bring the climate into coaching conversations and raise climate awareness in your clients. If you are unsure as to whether this programme is right for you, please feel free to get in touch.

How you learn

You will be introduced to the latest models, tools, and approaches to climate coaching, but you will also work a lot on yourself: both as a coach and as a human! This work around insight and self-management allows you to embody the climate coaching mindset and stand by your client. Your learning is supported through demonstrations, daily small group coaching practice, and opportunities to establish and maintain connections with nature.

The programme comprises three modules over three days. The modules are scheduled to allow time for reading and reflection between each day. We also encourage you to initiate climate coaching conversations between days one, two, and three to apply your learning and build your experience.

Delivery method

All three days of this programme will run virtually via Zoom, as we wish to maximise accessibility for participants and to minimise the carbon footprint.

Coaching in the Climate Crisis is also available to run in-house for organisations wishing to support climate conversations and introduce climate coaching into their portfolio. Please contact us for further information.

Programme faculty

The programme is delivered by two members of AoEC faculty. In 2022 the faculty are George Warren and Kirstie McLachlan, both of whom led the design of the programme.
